Severus and Hermione

Chapter 1 of 1

Severus and Hermione return to celebrate their anniversary where they'd spent their honeymoon, only to find themselves riding out a hurricane.

"Incompetent magical maintenance," Severus grumbled while slipping off his robe and returning to the bed.

"Was there a problem, Sev?" Hermione snuggled against her husband, trying to soothe his temper.

"No, they've reinforced the weather shield for another twelve hours. The storm should have passed by then."

"So, why are they incompetent?"

"Just listen."

Hermione was silent for several moments before whispering, "What am I listening to?"

"The rain hitting the shield."

"Just like on our honeymoon, remember? Now being trapped inside all weekend sounds even more romantic."

"It is not just like our honeymoon. That was a warm summer rain that dissipated the humidity and heralded a beautiful evening. This is a blasted hurricane!"

"Surely you're not going to blame maintenance for that?"

"No, just for not including a sound buffer in the shielding."

"At least we get to stay here alone. I heard that the Muggles are huddled in corridors. The shielding allows us to remain here, our view unimpeded, listening to the rain."

"I'd rather be listening to something else."

She shifted until she was straddling him. "Do you have something particular in mind?"

He reached his hands under her negligee and started to pull it over her head. "I suppose I didn't have any better plans after all."

Dedicated to all of the soggy fangirls in hurricane country.
