Hermione and Severus have an early morning tiff.

HP is not mine.

"I will simply walk to work, Hermione. Hogwarts is just down the road. Do you forget that we live in Hogsmeade?"

"It's snowing outside. I don't want you to get sick by walking to work," she said with concern. She wrapped her arms around his waist, resting her chin on his chest, staring into his obsidian eyes. She reached up on her tiptoes and pressed her lips to his with a gentleness that showed her love for him.

"It's a complete waste of gas for you to drive me to work," Severus said as he grabbed his outer coat, bundling himself up and wrapping a green scarf around his neck.

"Severus, shut up and get in the car."

A little drabble inspired by a story my professor told us in class the other day.
