Hermione takes Severus shopping for a new suit.

To NarcissasKnickers. Thank you for the prompt! It was fun.

“Severus, it’s called a suit,” Hermione said, laughing at Severus standing on the dais as a tailor was fitting him for a new suit.

He frowned as the man marked on him with chalk. “It’s not unlike my own coat. I like my own coat better.”

“It’s too old fashioned,” Hermione insisted for what seemed the hundredth time since she’d literally dragged him to Harrods. “You’re being knighted for Merlin’s sake; you need a proper suit.”

“Just because I stopped McNair from leading a raid against Buckingham Palace,” he sneered, eyeing the man suspiciously when he knelt to pin near his crotch.

“And saved Prince William from an attack!”

“They shouldn’t have been out there in the first place,” Severus snapped, really wanting to hex the man for nearly sticking him with a pin. Pins in that region were weapons, after all.

“The royal family was leaving because of the giant your pals dropped in the gardens!” Hermione exclaimed.

“Well, yes, there was that,” he said with a shrug and winced as the tailor got him with a pin. “Ouch!”

“And you did, single handedly, save the royal family,” she said proudly.

The man looked up in shock. “That was you? You’re – you – that was you?”

“Apparently,” Severus said.

“See, you’re a national hero,” Hermione said proudly.
