I Just Want You To Know Who I Am

There once was a pretty girl named Joy. She dropped out of high school to get married and had two kids, Lexis and Cameron. She lived happily for a while, until she got pregnant again. This time, her husband left her with no money and no life.

She was broke and couldn't get a job and was soon addicted to cocaine, so she began to sell her body to earn the money for basic necessities. Unfortunately, her drug problem caused her to spend most of her money on cocaine. Soon, her youngest child, Helena, became very ill, but she didn't realize. A few weeks later, Helena died of pneumonia. Joy, Lexis, and Cameron were devastated.

Joy realized she wasn't a fit mother and gave her remaining two children up for adoption. She was still addicted and selling her body, but now Lexis and Cameron had a chance for a better life.

One night, Joy began crying. The tears were unstoppable, and she began screaming to herself, "Nobody cares! Nobody knows who I am, and if they did, it's just another reason not to care! They just think I'm a whore and a junkie! And they're right!"

She cried for a while before finally deciding to end her life. That night, Joy Elizabeth Scott shot herself, and her last words were, "I just want you to know who I am."
