Hermione glared at her two best friends as they laughed, clutching their stomachs. "What possessed you to do it, Ron?"

"Because it was bloody fun, that's why!" He wiped the tears out of his eyes.

"Stealing Professor Snape's underpants is not fun. It's utterly immature. We're fifteen years old, for Merlin's sake."

"Hermione," Harry whined, "we're just having a laugh. You know living a little. You do know what living is right?"

She glared and went back to reading Hogwarts: A History. "You know I'll have to report you two."

"WHAT?!" Harry and Ron screamed simultaneously.

"You can't do that, Hermione! I'm a Prefect!"

"And as a Prefect you should know better than to steal a professor's underpants!" She scowled. "Don't go throwing around 'but I'm a Prefect' when you're acting like a first year!" She rose, shaking her finger in Ron's face. "Who are you trying to impress, Ronald? You're not impressing me, that's for sure!" Hermione gathered her books. Turning to leave, she said, "If you never grow up, then I'll never be able to lo--" She abruptly stopped and without another word rushed off to the girl's dormitories.
