

Hairbrush!

by peppermint

Hermione tests some products for the adult line at WWW.

Hairbrush!

Chapter 1 of 1

Hermione tests some products for the adult line at WWW.

Dear George,

Thanks so much for sending me stuff to product test for the new adult line. I doubt I “need a man” as badly as you think I do, but I did have a good time. Tell Lee I'm sorry his girlfriend ran off when he asked her to test the hairbrush - maybe she was just prescient!

The majority of the products worked just as you'd expect – I love the expanded, racier daydream charms. Those will fly off the shelves at any price. The flavors on the edible oils are delicious and held up well under testing with the various and sundry vibrators.

However, you still have a lot of work to do with the “Self-Spanking” hairbrush. (Don't laugh at me, George! And don't you dare share this letter with anybody else!) The craftsmanship of the item is excellent. The varnish over the wood is smooth, the handle is nicely curved, and the bristles are soft. I suggest you read on to discover what you need to do about the charm work.

I got undressed and activated the brush, just as the instructions said. It was very pleasant on the first level. The second level was all right, as well. I activated the third level for just a moment, and the thing went haywire! Not only are my rear end, upper thighs, and lower back bruised, but the damn thing whacked me in the back of the head a few times, too! A 'finite incantatum' didn't work, no other finality spells worked, and the supposed “safe word” also failed. I finally had to trap it in my laundry hamper and tie the hamper shut!

I like a little bit of pain - not a lot!

As far as I'm concerned, you owe me some bruise salve, a massage, and some Headache potion – and come and get the stupid thing. It's very disconcerting to have my laundry hamper rolling and leaping all over the floor.

Give my love to Angelina,

Hermione

A/N:

Inspired by a prompt from PajamaPants from week three of drabble night. Yes, I'm slow.

Hermione stumbles upon an experimental Weasley Wizarding Wheezes invention: a self-spanking hairbrush. She finds she rather likes the bit of pain. Also, does she find someone with whom she'll continue such explorations?