

Bluffin with my Muffin

by peppermint

Severus discoveres Lady Gaga

Bluffin with my Muffin

Chapter 1 of 1

Severus discoveres Lady Gaga

I don't own any of it.

Severus was unsure how an innocuous little device such as the small pink rectangle he held in his hand could deliver earwormy songs via the little string-like "earphones" with such astonishing clarity and ease.

Muggles had some strange music, that was for sure. He was delighted to find some of the music he heard on his summers home from school on the emm-pee-three player - Queen, ABBA, and the Beatles were often a welcome respite from the strange, newer things he found Hermione liked to listen to.

For example, this "Lady Gaga". He had to admit he'd found himself almost... dancing once or twice to the songs on that playlist. Well, he had tapped his foot. And he had thought The Beatles had the market cornered on cryptic phrases in their music! It seemed like this woman's entire catalogue was nothing but innuendo. Maybe he could get Hermione to show him a better picture on the computer later, if he could couch it as curiosity - the album cover was just a face behind giant sunglasses.

He thought he had most of his favorite song, "Poker Face", figured out, but there was one phrase he just wasn't sure about. What the hell did "I'm just bluffin' with my muffin" mean?

prompt from BrenaMarie:

Severus is exposed to Lady Gaga's song "Poker Face".

Can be either:

a) the video

b) the song on a radio

c) Christopher Walken or Jude Law speaking it.

Happy New Year Everyone!