Harry watched from the sofa as his wife pinballed around the house trying to ready it for their son's first birthday. James, himself, was upstairs sleeping peacefully in his crib, unaware of the hubbub.

"Harry, I could use a little help; the guests will be here soon," Ginny beseeched as she sped into the living room with streamers. Harry laughed and stood to help her.

Hours later, after their guests had all gone home to their quiet, clean houses, Harry and Ginny surveyed the damage.

"It's like a whirlwind blew through our house," Harry marveled.

"Have fun cleaning," Ginny laughed.
