Chapter 1 of 1

Christie Turner is a young girl in university struggling to handle supporting herself, managing her studies and friends.
What happens when she falls for two completely different guys, who have their own dark secrets...

How did it happen? Many people ask me this question all the time. How did I, a young girl of nineteen, end up married to one of the most dangerous men of the time...

Well, it all started one summer's day. I was in university, and I was wondering if I should change my major; I had not changed it once in the six months I had been there. I lived with an old family friend, where I was basically looked after. Although I still had trouble with money... I was placed on the scale of just above the poverty line. I suppose it was because Mrs O'Connely had so little money and because I had no family left to help me.

I had always been a good student at school: good grades, not a big party person, and I always studied for tests and exams. I always wished I could say I made my father happy, but he died too early for him to see me blossom at school. My mother died in childbirth so I barely remember her, but in pictures she always was surrounded by friends and was smiling. I wish I could copy her, but I couldn't. I was a shy, studious girl who had never had more than a handful of friends and had never been one for boys.

In a way it feels like my life is spiraling downwards; it is taking awhile but I guess it may just be...

A/N: This chapter/introduction ends on a negative note, but it does get more positive in the future chapters.
