

Getting Back at Umbridge

by Ravenscara

The Weasley Twins have done it again, only this time Umbridge is the victim.

Getting Back at Umbridge Part 1

Chapter 1 of 1

The Weasley Twins have done it again, only this time Umbridge is the victim.

Disclaimer: I own only the plot, Everything else belongs to the wonderful creator J.K. Rowling.

Journal entry of Gred and Forge Weasley number 666. (Muahahahaha!)

My brother and I are sick with that Umbridge bint, and we are going to get our school back. If any fellow Gryffindor students find this journal and meet her on the streets, please re-enact the following scenarios so that we will live on forever in her mind. These next few pages will be a list of what we need to do and what her reaction was to said scenarios. If we are successful, some of these ideas will be added to our shop order form.

Mind, anyone who reads this should not be faint hearted. Instead of wasting our times on N.E.W.T. like all the others, anything that we do to her that is not a Weasley Wizard Wheezes creation will be credited to the persons who came up with it in italics. On a side note, all the research for spells we did not know were done by the resident bookworm, Hermione Granger. Those spells will be Bolded.

Spells

1. Invisible Clown: We originally started to create a way to annoy Malfoy, but this turned out to be a better idea to use on Umbridge instead. While in her class we cast this spell and whenever she tells a lie about He-Who-Must-Not-Be-Named, a clown appears behind her that she cannot see. Unfortunately, she felt the crème pies slam into her face, demanding more testing before trying again. Only students that were privy to the special revealing spell we developed were able to view these shenanigans.

We earned 10 points to our house from Flitwick for this one. Sadly she found out when she used Veritaserum during her questioning of the students.

2. Changing Hair: Hermione found this one while trying to punish Harry and Ron during April Fools. When the victim looks in the mirror all they see is their normal hair color. Everyone else will see their corresponding house color. Though, McGonagall reports that Dumbledore saw Purple and Hagrid saw Orange.

We earned only five points from Flitwick, but Hermione got the other five. Unfortunately Snape was the one who knew the counter charm, and poor Hermione had received detention for a week after it was sorted out. Apparently she is the only one smart enough to figure out how to pull off this prank.

3. Enlarging Body Parts: While eating in the Great Hall we observed that Umbridge sticks her pinky out when she drinks. We simply enlarged it so it stuck out like a sore thumb. HAHA!

We reduced it when she put it down, and she actually believed she was allergic to something.

We earned only 3 points for this one for the lack of originality.

We did however enlarge her clothes afterwards so she looked like a circus freak for a little while. We then rushed over to help 'fix' it and reduced them so much that her horrible pink cardigan ripped. That one earned us another seven points from our wonderful Charms professor.

4. Flies for Toads: Again, Hermione: we wouldn't have been able to do this without you. The statement was made that Umbridge looked like a certain amphibian and the bow upon her head a fly. With a simple flick of our wands, we made candy gummy flies fly around her head; if she felt hunger, her tongue transfigured into that of a frogs and she would be compelled to catch one.

This was combined with the gross factor when she tried it during dinner while sitting next to Snape, accidentally snapping him on the cheek with her tongue. We seriously believed he would Avada her right there.

Thirty points for this one, and Hermione received another thirty.

5. Blood Tea (Ginny Weasley): Yes, our little sister had to add one. During a completely unjustified interrogation, Fred cleverly charmed her tea to act like blood. After taking a sip a faint red outline clung to her lips. The poor first years were scared half-to-death, believing she was a demon out to get them.

Surprisingly, Snape awarded us points for this one although it was only one each. We think he believed it was a potion that did it and not a charm.

6. Vampire Mirror: This pairs up with blood tea and allows her to see herself with vampire fangs as well.

Umbridge freaked out so much that she actually went to Madam Pomfrey to double check that she wasn't one of the undead. We got 10 for this one as well.

Potions

1. Love Potion: We slipped some of this into her tea and her first victim was Filch; we actually caught them snogging in the halls and we practically hurled. Filch has been following her around ever since, which means he is leaving Snape alone at last.

Earned five points from the greasy bat.

2. Nightmare in a Bottle: Dobby, our best little house-elf friend, coated her food in this tricky little potion which adds extra flavor, but with horrible side effects.

The person imbibing it does not need to be asleep for the nightmare to take place. Everyone in the vicinity can hear the nightmare since the victim is speaking aloud the entire time. Apparently Umbridge is afraid of clowns and Filch.

Only got 3 for this one.

Actual Weasley Products

1. Swamp: This was our final hurrah; we created a swamp in the middle of the fifth floor in the East Wing. Flitwick eventually removed all but a portion of it, and we received no points.

2. Fireworks: Weasleys' Wildfire Whiz-Bangs. Those things were amazing. Vanishing them caused them to multiply by ten and some even mated together. Umbridge ended up running around all of Hogwarts because none of the teachers wanted to put them out themselves. Flitwick even back-sassed her over it.

Again, no points, and we used our entire stock but it was worth it.

And that, my friends, concludes everything we have done to Umbridge so far. Feel free to claim a prank with your name and a description of what you did. When we open our shop it will be added to the list of things that we put on the 'Down With Umbridge' poster we are creating.

AN/ Hi all, this came to me as I was watching HP #5. I kinda lost my focus half-way through though, so sorry. Blame it on the bunnies. Seriously though, if you have an idea of a 'Down With Umbridge' Post it in the review section, and I will start on the second one of this including everyone who added theirs to the list. Next in the Getting Back series is Snape.