Hermione woke up, not sure where she had woken up at. Long stretches of arid land lay before her. The sky was purple and the desolate plant life was bright orange, not a shade of green to be found. The breeze was hot and dry. Standing next to her in this land was a dark cloaked figure she hadn't seen in years. Snape.

"Where am I?" she asked, her words coming out distorted and sounding like an echo.

"Where do you believe you are?" he asked, his voice sounding distorted as well.

"Hell?" she guessed.

Then Snape smiled. "Not anymore."
