Boxers or briefs? Rita Skeeter attempts to provide answers to the questions.

"Good evening, wizards and witches everywhere. This is your Fly Witness Entertainment editor, Rita Skeeter, with the latest in the series 'What are They Wearing?' Tonight's topic is 'Boxers or Briefs: Time to Discover.' At great peril to myself, you know all those pesky fly strips and swatters, this reporter took on an investigation as to what those wonderful wizards we all know and adore choose as their personal preference.

"My first stop was the quarters of the glamorous and stylish Lucius Malfoy, and I was not surprised to discover he prefers the stylish low-rise briefs, as does his son, the young Draco. Of course, they would choose to be styling and profiling even when it comes to the finer touches of garments.

"Next stop was the infamous former Minister of Magic, Cornelius Fudge's bureau where I discovered, also to no surprise, his choice was boxers. He always was rather a predictable sort although I will admit I was rather caught off guard to find several pink pairs in there. There was no surprise either that I discovered boxers were also a choice of the Bagman males, Crabbe and Goyle, and John Dawlish.

"I would now be telling you what I discovered in Arthur Weasley's wardrobe, but I'm afraid Molly Weasley was rather adept with that darn swatter, and your intrepid reporter barely made it out with her life.

"It was rather a shock to your beloved reporter when I discovered that Dimitrov had a penchant for thongs, ladies' thongs. My, oh my! Dear Dimitrov, we never suspected exactly what you were chasing, dear boy. Of course, that was not as surprising as the discovery that dear Albus had none to be found. Do we hear a cheer for 'going regimental'?"

Finally, the man most ladies wanted to know about, Severus 'Stopper in Death' Snape. I am sorry to say, boxers. Grey boxers. Very grey boxers. At least I think they were boxers but I really had no desire to actually touch their greyness. So there you have it. Underwear styles of the wizarding and famous brought to you by our sponsor, Spell of the Loom Clothiers. This is Rita Skeeter signing off and wishing you stripper nights and souvenir panties."
