

On the Nature of Daylight

by Akoya8

The relationship between Severus and Lily leading up to their split in Fifth Year.

Meeting

Chapter 1 of 1

The relationship between Severus and Lily leading up to their split in Fifth Year.

Disclaimer: I do not own Harry Potter (even though I should), nor do I own "On the Nature of Daylight" (it was composed by Max Richter), and I do not own "This Bitter Earth" (which is sung by Dinah Washington). The quotes that are taken directly from the books are italicized and nestled between quotation marks. This is also up on ff.net, but under my other pen-name: A for Anarchy.

"Meeting"

Meeting Lily Evans for the first time could only be measured against his first taste of ice cream.

She was sweet (and slightly sticky, as all children inexplicably are), and the feeling of watching her go could be equated with the sorrow that he felt when he realized that the ice cream was gone. And he had been in such a rush to revel in the new experience of having a friend that he forgot to savor the moments that he had with her.

When he got home that first day, he decided that he had a new favorite color: green, like the color of her eyes when they shone with happiness. Was there such a thing as an ice cream that had that same color of green?