Chapter 1 of 1

Don't worry. You need only panic if you are a Quidditch fangirl.

A/N-Thanks, as always, to my wonderful beta. Along with everything else, she helped me with my title. Whether or not she wants to take credit for that pre-coffee advice remains to be seen. Hopefully this is apparent, but the change in font indicates a change in speaker during the news program. Just a warning because my head was spinning during the process, so yours might be during the reading.

"All right, Percy, we're on our way out. Are you sure you don't want anyone to stay and help you put together the rest of the show?"

"I'm fine. I actually look forward to having some time to myself. I'll just grab a bite to eat and then get back to work."

"The only two segments left are the health report and the Quidditch story."

"Got it," he said, then pulled out his firewhisky to have a glass or three after everyone left. Percy was slumped over the desk later, too far gone to hear the reports he had drunkenly edited.

"The top news story amongst medical professionals is the recent rise in sexually transmitted diseases in witches. The experts say that this can be attributed to

The current record was 1,196, but Krum just blew that to bits, surpassing the 1,200 mark. Yes, folks, he is on fire when urinating, but can also have symptoms such as abnormal discharge, bleeding, or painful intercourse.

We interviewed a young woman who admits that she is obsessed with Krum. She shared that info with her husband, and now that's not the only thing they share. Doctors warn that this threatens to become an epidemic. People think it is all fun and games the way he goes in and out, and up and down with such passion. It's as if the position was custom made for him! His popularity is high as ever with men, but a record number of women have now bought season tickets to his games,

The next day saw an influx in the number of Quidditch fans visiting St. Mungo's to check their sexual health status. No one questioned it with the recent attention in popular medical journals, and subsequently, the media.

The employees of Quality Quidditch Supplies were informed by the manager of the radio program that had aired the previous evening, so no one was surprised when a mass of women showed up asking to be tested.

Percy Weasley turned in his resignation, then turned in a job application at Weasley's Wizard Wheezes.

Viktor Krum, however, was confused when his advances were turned down by three women in a row, and he wondered when he had lost his status as the sex symbol of Quidditch. Apparently, he doesn't listen to the radio.

Prompt: A garbled message on the Wizarding Wireless causes mass panic.
