Sometimes things aren't always what they seem...

Luna was working at her new job. Like her mother, she was an inventor. However, she specialized in making new candies and chocolates. Her new shop, Sweet Surprise, had been doing a booming business ever since Honeydukes closed down after the Second War. She had moved into the old Honeydukes shop and lived in a flat above her store.

Her favorite time was in the evening after her shop was closed, because that was when she did most of her work. One of her latest inventions was a new version of the Chocolate Frogs, which not only could be eaten but they would also take care of flies in the home. She had a basket full of them sitting on the edge of her workbench right now, waiting to be tried.

Another invention that she had recently completed were chocolate budgies. Like the Chocolate Frogs, they served more than one purpose. If you didn't want to eat them right away, they were able to sing just like a real budgie, as well as fly around the room. Her workroom was quite noisy right now, as she had a flock of budgies keeping her company and flying around the room singing all the way.

Just then the door to her workroom opened, and Hermione walked in with Crookshanks trotting at her feet.

"Good eve-" Hermione started, but then chaos erupted as Crookshanks started jumping all over the place as he tried to get the budgies.

"Crookshanks!" Hermione cried as she watched her pet trying to catch the birds.

"Don't worry, Hermione," Luna said calmly. "They are made of chocolate. They are meant to be eaten."

Hermione raised her eyebrow at her friend, but just smiled and shook her head. The two friends burst out laughing as Crookshanks managed to catch a budgie and bite into it, only to find it was made of chocolate. He immediately spit it out, since he knew that it was poisonous to him.

He truly had gotten a 'Sweet Surprise.'

Prompt from Pennfana: Luna, Crookshanks, a flock of budgies, and a basket full of chocolate frogs
