Chapter 1 of 1

Professor Snape does not have a happy Christmas.

26th December: Bloody hell! I must charm this diary to hex me if I ever decide to visit my blasted father's family for Christmas again! My charming Muggle cousins received a computer for Christmas, complete with something called Board Band, which gives them access to numerous of these spider-web-site things about me.

One of the worst, which needless to say the whole family found hilarious, was something called The Petulant Poetess, which seems to be run by a group of sexually insatiable Muggle women, and is full of lies about me sleeping with students and teachers alike. Sybill Trelawney? I ask you! If anyone has cause to be petulant, it's me.

When Aunt Joan started blowing up balloons with a knowing glint in her eye, I left in disgust. Next Christmas, I am going to lock myself in my office with a bottle of Firewhisky (and possibly some of those stories involving me and a certain Miss Granger – well, a man can dream!)

5th April: Bloody, bloody hell! Cannot believe what the barmy old codger we are insane enough to let run this school wants me to do now. Only dress up as the bloody Easter Bunny! Apparently some lunatic Muggle woman has put him up to it. (Note to self: must write a letter to these women setting down ground rules for these fanciful scribblings of theirs.)

Why can't they get Lupin to do it? He's obsessed with chocolate. Or Flitwick. He's at least the right height. I'm six-foot-two, for Merlin's sake; I'm going to look like something out of that James Stewart film my father keeps watching.

Still, suppose I'd better do it if I want to stand any chance of getting the Dark Arts job next year.

One day I swear I am going to KILL Albus Dumbledore!

A/N: Very loosely connected with a Christmas Eve prompt by Fairfield: 'Someone finds solace in reading drabbles on Christmas Eve.' This started off life as a post on the Amazon.co.uk Harry Potter forums. Prompt for the Easter entry was one of Dumbledore's diary entries: 'Not sure why we celebrate a Muggle Christian festival, but a pagan fertility rite in a school full of hormonal teenagers might be a bad idea. So was Argus Filch as the Easter Bunny – made most of the first years cry. Oh well, live and learn. Maybe Severus as the Easter Bunny next year?' (My thanks go to Amazon contributor, Ashley.)
