

Comparatives

by Ladymage Samiko

Severus and Hermione revel in each other's differences.

Comparatives

Chapter 1 of 1

Severus and Hermione revel in each other's differences.

Genetics made her a tall woman; malnutrition made him a short man. She could—and did—look him straight in the eye.

Her legs were longer than his; he liked them draped over his shoulders.

His hands were larger than hers—obvious when one pinned her wrists above her head and the other palmed her breast.

Her lips were full; he liked the feel of them on... whatever she chose to apply them to.

His teeth were oddly set; she liked to map them with her tongue.

She liked to hear his baritone—and he, her alto—when they came.