Lupin shifted uneasily. "It needs some work inside ..."

At least, thought Snape, that means the inside isn't as ... fancy looking. Pretty really wasn't his taste.

"It needs prettying up."

Snape grimaced and took the key Lupin was fiddling with. "It's a roof over our heads." He met Lupin's doubtful gaze. "I couldn't ask for more. Besides – once you're inside, how much more prettying up will it need?" Lupin brightened – and blushed. Snape put his hand on his bum and pushed him inside.

He peered at the climbers threatening to flower around the door.

He'd blast those later when Lupin wasn't looking.
