Hermione thinks of Snape. Companion story to "My Thoughts of Her."

I think of him and wonder if he believes me to hate him for what he's done. I can't believe that he did anything other than what he had to do. What haunts me at night when I try to sleep? It's not that my life has been turned upside down.

It's him and the way his eyes softened when he saw me as he left his office that night. In his eyes, I was someone who believed in him – someone who he believed in enough to keep us away from harm. He wanted to keep me away from harm.

This is a 100-word story about Hermione's thoughts on Snape and a companion to the story I have where he thinks of her.
