Ironic

Chapter 1 of 1

The switch of personalities is sometimes necessary and often painful.

An evil glint in her eye stabbed his heart as easy as a knife could his flesh. His sharp intake of breath and the pain and disbelief that filled him was open for all to see. His shackled arms and legs held him tightly as he twitched in the agony that crashed over him in droves.

She tilted her chin and turned from him. "Guilty. Guilty of all charges."

"No, Her—"

She flinched and spun to face him. "Don't speak," her voice had softened sadly for a moment, but her eyes stayed hard and cold. Ironic, with how things changed.
