Severus glanced over at his wife, who was curled up on their couch, reading. She'd been there for most of the past twenty-four hours, stopping only briefly for loo breaks and eating with her eyes glued to the pages. Thankfully, it looked like she was almost finished; perhaps now he could finally...

"Ew!" Snape's attention refocused sharply at her exclamation. "I can't believe... I can't believe they'd think that!"

He grabbed The Deathly Hallows from Hermione's hands and scanned its pages. His sallow skin became uglier with a pronounced green tinge. "I am supposed to have done everything for her?!"
