Severus' eyes were narrowed as looked at the pizza that Hermione had placed upon a plate.

"You can hardly expect me to be a... slob and eat that without cutlery," he said severely. This exasperating witch of his clearly needed to be taught better table manners.

"But it's enjoyable when you don't use cutlery," Hermione said reasonably. This uptight wizard of hers needed to loosen up at times.

"Here, let me demonstrate," she went on. She brought a piece up to her mouth and took a bite, some of the melted cheese getting on her chin.

"Mmm..." Hermione said cheerfully.

Severus found himself gazing too long at the delectable mouth of hers that had just eaten some pizza and recalled himself with irritation.

"As you have clearly demonstrated, withholding cutlery leads to cheese on one's chin," he said a shade tartly.

Hermione blinked at him. "Really?" she said innocently as she located the offending cheese and put it delicately into her mouth.

Severus felt his face become heated as he watched her... other parts of his body becoming decidedly heated.

Hermione sighed. "I suppose you know best... I'll go and get some cutlery."

"Forget the damn cutlery," Severus said huskily.
