Chapter 1 of 1

Severus discovers something baffling while on the new computer.

(A ficlet I wrote after watching the funniest music video known to man.)

'The internet is a fascinating thing,' Severus couldn't help but think to himself as he found himself spending hours on the contraption that Hermione had insisted on buying for their country home.

So far, he'd figured out how on-line banking worked, ordered groceries, and now he was immersed in going through Hermione's bookmarks – she had some fascinating articles linked. It was amazing what information could be had without going through numerous dusty tomes.

One title drew his eye, however – 'If Severus Were Michael Jackson.'

"What on earth?" he muttered. He remembered Michael Jackson when he was younger, and out of curiosity, his hand went ahead and clicked the link of its own accord. A music video appeared on the screen, and at its start, he couldn't stop himself from watching.

When the video ended, he sat open-mouthed, his mind flabbergasted.

"Well, at least I can dance!" he muttered, dumbfounded, leaving the room to find his wife.

He discovered her singing softly as she was preparing dinner, "You're under cover, my secret lover—"

Sneaking up on her and folding her in his arms, he whispered in her ear, "You're what I need, my bullets in the gun."

Laughter filled their home for the rest of the evening.

(Author's Note: I just absolutely had to write this after watching these two music videos – that is after I had my laughter under control. Hope you guys find it as hilarious as I did!

Actually, the second video made me laugh harder, but the first video seemed more appropriate in the story. :))
